MATTER LANDS IN SIBERIA; HAS A GOOD MARGIN

Round-World Flier to Remain at Omsk Until Tomorrow

ARRIVES AT 6:35, E. D. T.

12 Hours, 20 Minutes Are Required for 1450-
Mile Journey

OMSK, Siberia, June 6.—James Mattern, Texas flier, headed round the world, with a good margin over the present record for the flight, will remain here until tomorrow, it was officially announced late today. Mattern arrived here this morning from Moscow.

MOSCOW, June 6.—Sweeping across Siberia on his record-breaking skyride around the world, James Mattern, Texas aviator, landed at Omsk at 10:35 g. m. t. (6:35 a. m., e. d. t.)

Omsk, an important town on the trans-Siberian railway line, possessing an excellent airfield, is 1450 miles east of Moscow. With the 5 hours and 16 minutes held by Wiley Post and Harold Gatty, round the world fliers whose record he is attempting to break, Mattern left Moscow at 6:15 p. m., e. d. t. last night. Apparently held back by head winds and adverse weather, Mattern took 12 hours and 20 minutes to cover the distance between Moscow and Omsk. He made only 110 miles an hour as against his 145 miles an hour clip across the ocean from Newfoundland to Norway.

Before official word was received here telling of Mattern's arrival at Omsk, various false reports of landing reached October airport where Russian airmen eagerly awaited news of his progress. One report placed him at Seidlovsk, only 1,000 miles east of Moscow, while another from Harbin, Manchuria, said he had flown as far as Irkutsk, 2500 miles away.

Inadequate communication facilities and the fact that today is a Soviet "free day," contributed to prevent word of Mattern's safe landing from reaching here until many hours after he had set his red, white and blue plane, "Century of Progress" down at Omsk.

HARBIN, Manchuria, June 6.—(INS)—Jimmy Mattern, Texas flier attempting a record-breaking round-the-world flight, arrived at Irkutsk, Siberia, from Moscow today, according to a report received here.

The report did not give the time of the reported arrival. Irkutsk is more than 1,400 miles east of Omsk, Mattern's original destination after leaving Moscow.

BANKING PROBLEMS ONE OF CHIEF AIMS

Re-Establishment of International Financing to Be Considered at Conference

SEEK NORMAL SCALE

This is the last of a series of five articles, in which International News Service surveys the problems to be considered by the World Economic Conference, opening in London on June 12. Today's article deals with capital movements and plans which have been suggested for a new international credit institution.

By H. K. Reynolds

(I. N. S. Staff Correspondent)
LONDON, June 6.—The re-establishment of international financing, one of the highly technical problems to be considered by the London Conference, is basically a banking problem, having to do with capital movements between nations and the handling of commercial indebtedness.

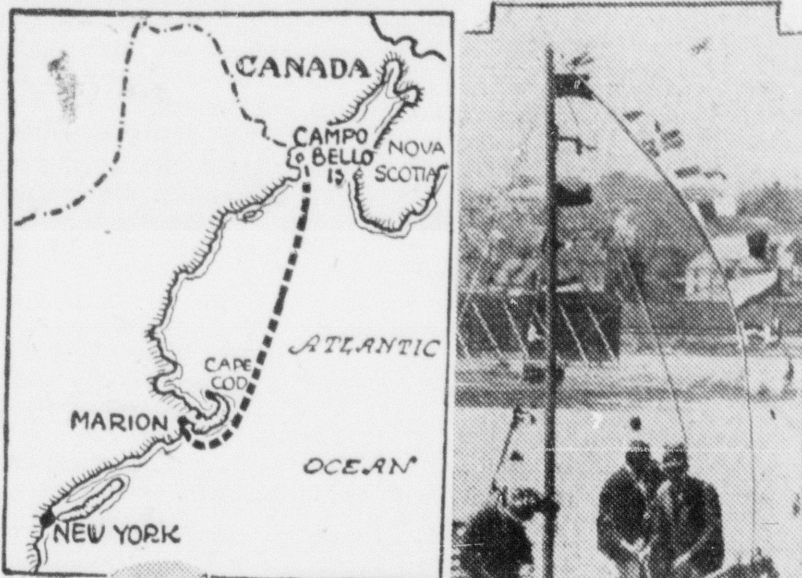

To restore capital movements on a normal scale, the Conference will consider the establishment of a special credit institution, such as a Monetary Normalization fund, as was suggested at the Stresa Conference.

The purpose of such a fund would be to stimulate lending, and might be administered by the Bank for International Settlements.

In the preliminary discussions of the necessity for attacking financial inertia, it was thought by the experts at Geneva that progress could be made by creating an International Credit Institute, which would get its funds from

Miss Tamburello Plays Another Interesting Part

You have seen Miss Frances Tamburello in "The Talk of the Town"; you have seen her as Alvin in "The Impersonator" and now in "Take My Tip" which will be given on June 11th and 12th by St. Ann's Guild in St. Ann's School Auditorium, the versatile Frances has an entirely new role and plays it to perfection. She portrays Sara Merrill, mother of Henry Merrill, who is deeply engrossed in Wall Street. Her womanly intuition seems to foresee the market crash (1929). She warns her son, but her warnings are futile.

Miss Tamburello plays a difficult part. She does not exemplify the sweet, loving mother—no, she is a capable woman with an excellent business head, but hard, nagging and relentless towards her son on account of his Wall St. gambling. Only in the second act, the climax of the play, when the market crash makes a poor man of her son and all his friends turn against him accusing him of being a thief, a liar and other things, then the mother in her is aroused. She is no more a hard woman; she is a mother, a lioness defending her young one, fiery and noble.

Mrs. Esther Vasey, Camden, N. J., was an overnight guest of Mr. and Mrs. Leonard Fenton, Harrison street.

FRENZIED FINANCIAL HISTORY

Washington, D. C., June 6.—A new page of frenzied financial history showing how J. P. Morgan & Company captured the railroad empire that the VanSweringen brothers built on borrowed capital and public investments, was to be related today at the Senate banking inquiry.

The VanSweringen brothers, according to the picture already revealed, acquired a series of great railroad lines without the investment of a single penny of their own. They borrowed capital to make cash payment and then floated securities to pay off the balance of their indebtedness in taking over such prominent railroads as Nickel Plate and the Chesapeake and Ohio.

The Morgan interests began to appear in the story when the VanSweringens finally went to the international banking firm to get a loan for the purpose of equipment, subsequently, and Ferdinand Pecora, special Senate counsel, will bring out this development: The Morgans acquired control of all the VanSweringen carriers through the giant Allegheny Corporation, a holding company.

Before this story is resumed, the Senate Banking and Currency Committee will decide what to do about investigating the income tax returns of three Morgan brothers. It asked Pecora and J. W. Davis, chief Morgan counsel, to agree on a stipulation of all facts concerning income taxes of William Ewing, Harold Stanley and Thomas S. LaMond, junior Morgan partners.

Miss Mary K. Dick Becomes Wife of Albin L.
Krempecks

TO RESIDE IN TRENTON

An impressive wedding was consummated this morning at 10 o'clock in St. Mark's R. C. Church when Miss Mary K. Dick, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Michael Dick, Edgely, and Albin L. Krempecks, Trenton, N. J., in the presence of a large gathering were united in marriage by the Rev. Paul E. Baird, with a nuptial mass.

Miss Katharine Keating presided at the organ and the bridal party entered the church to the strains of Lohengrin's wedding march. During the ceremony Mrs. Carl Wench sang "I Love You Truly." Other soloists were Mrs. E. M. Keating who sang "Ave Maria," and Miss Celia Kelly who sang "Oh Lord I am not worthy," during the communion. Mendelssohn's wedding march was played as the party left the church.

The bride's attendants were her two sisters, Misses Anna and Katharine Dick, Raymond Ogurk, Green Ridge, N. J., served as best man.

The bride was gowned in a frock of bridal satin, form fitting, long puff sleeves with tulle and lace. With it she wore a turban with pearl designs, white kid slippers and white lace gloves. She carried a bouquet of bridal roses with streamers of sweet peas.

The maid of honor was attired in a blue tulle dress with pink trimming, corded and form fitting. Her accessories were a pink hat with veil, pink mitts and pink suede sandals. Miss Katharine Dick looked attractive in a dress of pink tulle trimmed with blue, form fitting with corded skirt, blue turban with veil, blue mitts and blue suede slippers. Her bouquet was blue and pink with blue ribbon streamers.

TELLS USES MADE OF MONEY AT THE BANKING HOUSES

Lester D. Thorne, Bristol
Trust Company, Enlightens
Republican Women

AT COUNTY MEETING

Discusses Federal Guaranty of Bank Deposits; Speaks of "Flaws"

In addressing members of Bucks County Council of Republican Women at Doylestown Country Club, Friday, Lester D. Thorne, cashier of The Bristol Trust Company, discussed Federal guaranty of bank deposits. The first portion of the address is here published:

Perhaps we can spend a few minutes profitably discussing the Federal Guaranty of Bank Deposits. It will be my endeavor to show you some of the flaws in the so-called "Deposit Insurance Plans" proposed by the present Administration. It is a serious matter and of interest to you as tax payers and of particular interest to you who are stockholders in banks and trust companies, or to you whose income is very largely dependent upon dividends from the stock of banks and trust companies.

At the very beginning, let me say to you that bankers generally are not opposed to insurance or guaranty of bank deposits for any selfish reason, but rather because they are convinced that insurance or guaranty is definitely against the best interests of the depositors, a fact which has already been proven by eight separate experiments. During the past two or three years I think every honest banker—and there are one or two of them left—would have been glad if some feasible plan had been in operation for the guaranty of deposits.

In order to understand the failure of any attempt on the part of the Government to guarantee or insure bank deposits it seems wise to trace credit from its origination to its destination. How does credit originate? Where is its source? How does it get from its source to produce such tremendous effect upon the entire world?

Mr. Garret Garrett has written a very interesting book entitled, "A Bubble That Broke the World," and in that book his explanation of the use and inflation of credit is so well put we can use it as a good illustration. In order to make it seem more real let us imagine we are sitting in a local bank in Bucks County.

Very few customers who enter the bank take time to meditate upon the effect of their banking transactions. Most people read the signs over the windows and give little thought to their connection with the credit structure. Above one window will be "Teller," another "Savings" and still another "Loans and Discounts." Just back of these windows you will find the desk of the President, Cashier or Treasurer of the bank. Suppose we see what happens to the money which comes and goes at the bank.

The man employed at the factory leaves a portion of his wages at the window marked "Savings." The farmer has been paid for the milk which he brought to town and he also leaves some at this window. The track-walker, who works for the railroad, the mechanic from the garage, the clerk from the store, the stenographer and the bookkeeper all put money between the leaves of a little book and pass it through the window. The man behind the window enters the amount in the little book and passes the book back to the customers. When the day is ended the money is counted, put in packages and placed in the safe and entered on the big book of the bank as "Time Deposits."

The customers who go to the window marked "Teller" are the business men in the town. They are the shopkeepers, real estate agents, automobile salesmen and all the tradespeople who represent business and industry. They bring both money and checks to deposit. On pay day at the factory they cash their own check to pay their employees the wages due them. The employees spend part of their money at the stores and shops and these people in turn bring it back again to the bank and deposit it at the window marked "Teller." The employees of the mills and factories do not spend all of their money and they bring some back to the bank and deposit it at the window marked "Savings." The same dollar travels in and out of the bank several times within a week. This is called circulation of money and the speed with which it travels back and forth is called the velocity of money.

The difference between the amounts received and paid out by the Tellers is written down on the big book of the bank as "Demand Deposits." It is reasonable to assume in normal times the amounts received will be larger than the amounts paid out due to the profit made by each one of the storekeepers on the sales which he has made.

The increase in the "Demand Deposits" is also placed in the safe with the "Time Deposits" and it is from

CONFLICTING PRINCIPLES

One of man's commonest faults—his habit of accepting his principles as universal and unlimited in application—is dealt with in "Conflict of Principles," by former President Abbott Lawrence Howell, of Harvard University. He introduces his eternal subject with this observation:

"What appears as a universal principle is in fact often true only within the limits of the conditions in which it is properly applied, and becomes partially true, or altogether inapplicable, under new and unfamiliar circumstances. Yet we find a difficulty in emancipating ourselves from a conviction of its absoluteness and tend to rely upon it as an infallible guide where it is so no longer."

Principles commonly accepted as universal have their limits, with the result that inconsistent principles come into collision with resultant conflict, which can only be avoided by universal recognition of the natural limits of the conjugate principles.

Doctor Lowell points out that Washington is honored for winning a war for independence, and Lincoln for crushing a war for independence; the English believe in self-government and rule by the majority yet hold India in subjection although there are more Hindus than English; patriotism and humanitarianism are conflicting principles because patriotism leads to inhumane wars, and true humanitarianism limits one's patriotism.

The book is prescribed for the reformer and crusader.

DECLINE OF VERACITY

Veracity is something more than an ideal in the Naval Academy at Annapolis, where the discipline and training seek to inculcate it in the character of each midshipman.

The academy administration considers the quality of truthfulness of such importance to future officers of the country's navy that two members of this year's graduating class were expelled on the eve of graduation when found guilty of having made false statements regarding offenses they had committed.

All the world associates truth with honor, yet in our everyday lives all find it expedient to divorce the two for practical purposes. It is so easy to lie oneself out of trouble or criticism and into benefits and opportunities.

Truthfulness is one of the neglected virtues. Civilization seems to discourage rather than foster it. In every walk of life, not excluding the ministry, there are too many persons who will not stop short of a lie to gain an advantage. Political campaigns, even reform movements, are waged with exaggeration and misrepresentation. In our courts the words "the truth, the whole truth and nothing but the truth" have become a mockery.

Therefore, it is refreshing to learn that at least in one little corner of our national life the virtue of truthfulness is taught and untruthfulness is punished as an unpardonable sin.

"STOLEN LOVE"

by HAZEL LIVINGSTON

COPYRIGHT BY KING FEATURES SYNDICATE, INC.

WHAT HAS HAPPENED SO FAR.

Joan Hastings, seventeen and beautiful, lives with two old maiden aunts, Evvie and Babe Van Fleet, in Sausalito, Cal. Joan falls in love with Bill Martin, a penniless young mechanic. Bill, an innocent victim of a bootlegging gang, is sent to jail and Joan, begging for bail money from the aunts, confesses her love for Bill. She is put on a train for school in Philadelphia in charge of a woman friend of Aunt Evvie's. Joan slips off the train and a passing motorist gives her a ride back home. Meanwhile Bill, freed, rushes to see Joan only to find her gone. Aunt Evvie denounces Bill and tells him the kindest thing he can do is never try to see her again. He bids goodbye to his mother, leaving no address. Shortly after, Joan arrives at Bill's home and is broken-hearted to learn he has gone away.

NOW GO ON WITH THE STORY.

CHAPTER XV.

She almost ran up the hill. She wanted to get back to her own big, quiet room, and bury her hot face on the cool white coverlet on the bed. She had come to the big tree where the blue jays lived before she realized. She couldn't go back. It wasn't her room any more. She had run away.

Back over the miles to Bill, and he gone, and no place to go.

The nightmare feeling came back. If only she'd wake up, and find Bill waiting. . . . feel his arms around her. . . . or even Aunt Evvie scolding her for something. But she knew it wasn't a nightmare. It was real. She'd never wake up.

"And to think—all the while I was coming back—I never once thought he might not be here!"

She kept whispering it over to herself, as she crept down the hill. It seemed so funny, Joan Hastings, who always lived in the big yellow house with the hedge, couldn't ever go back any more! She couldn't go back because she was supposed to be on her way to Cousin Belle's school. She had chosen that—in- stead of (she shuddered as she thought it)—the Reform School.

Going off to the city, to look for a job, and not knowing anybody, not having any place to go.

"Things happen so funny—so funny."

One last look. You couldn't see much of the house—just the yellow turrets against the wind break of eucalyptus trees. They cut off the view from the low road.

"I wish I could have seen the rose garden just once more. . . . it looked so pretty. . . . that night. . . . in the moonlight. . . ."

Her eyes filled, but she felt happier. The rose garden made Bill seem nearer. He went away because he thought she had gone, and when he found out that she wasn't in the East, then he would come back too.

"One to San Francisco!" she said to the man in the ticket window at the Pier.

"Taxi! Taxi!"

"All the way up Market Street. Have your fares ready—"

"Paper—lady—all about the—"

Joan stood at the Ferry Building, facing San Francisco alone. All the noise of a big city whirled about her. Rushing commuters pushed her frantically aside as they dashed for closing gates. Newsboys wanted to sell her evening papers, taxi drivers wanted to take her in their bright-colored cabs, hotel men barked strange, unfamiliar names. Street cars whirled jangling around the loop. It was the end of the day, everyone was going home. Every- one but Joan, who could never go home again.

She hadn't realized it would be so late—nearly six o'clock. She hadn't realized anything, except that Bill was gone. On the boat the green water had sped by, the gulls had screamed, the Sausalito shore had faded away, and she had watched stupidly, thinking, "Bill's gone. . . . he didn't wait for me. . . . Oh Bill, come back, come back!"

And now she was in San Francisco, all alone, with eleven dollars and twenty cents in her purse, and a clean blouse and a brush and comb and a nightgown in the small brown bag.

Everyone was hurrying so, it made her suddenly conscious of her own delay. You can't stand in one spot forever! You have to go to a hotel, when you haven't any home or friends to go to. But what hotel?

Joan didn't know. The bus drivers seemed to be all shouting at her, the taxi men too. Even the policeman was staring. A loungeer smirked. They were all looking at her, wondering. "What's the matter with that girl? Why doesn't she go somewhere? Hasn't she any home?"

She hit her lip to stop its trembling. Panic was claiming her. She fought a crazy desire to board the nearest street car, and ride, ride, ride. . . . just anywhere.

"Was someone to meet you, my dear?"

A pleasant faced woman with the gold badge of the Travelers' Aid pinned on her coat, had come to

I'm kind of dumb at times. This seems to be one of the times. Mind if I have a drink?"

She shook her head.

"You wouldn't like one yourself? No, of course not. Just hospitality, good thing to leave alone." He poured a little glass from a silver flask very slowly, and drank it at a gulp. "Aah—" he said, and made a face.

"Doesn't it taste good?"

"Terrible—I only take it for my health." Now he was laughing again, his big jolly laugh, and Joan felt more at ease.

"I thought perhaps you could tell me a hotel—that wasn't very expensive." She glanced timidly about the luxuriously appointed room.

"Not like this one, you know! And maybe tell me how I could get a job. I'm afraid I don't know just how you get jobs."

"Well, let's see. Can you stenog? Write the little notbooks and hit the of typewriter—"

Joan almost ran up the hill. She wanted to get back to her own big room.

Joan, her brown-gloved hand was closing on the little bag. "Come—we'll go over to my office, and it will be so much more comfortable waiting there."

"No—no, thank you. I'm waiting for someone myself!" Her steady now. Her mind cleared. She must get away quickly, before this woman found out who she was. Mrs. Marden must have wired back by this time. . . . get away. . . . somehow. . . . quick.

She was looking around, pretending to be searching for someone. "I don't see my friend. I think I'll go on home!" Her wandering eye rested on a telephone booth in the station. "If you'll excuse me—I want to phone."

She broke away, hurrying to the booth. It had a glass door, the woman could see her, so she fumbled in her purse for a nickel, to make the pantomime more convincing. Walter Dunne's card tumbled out—Walter Dunne, the only person she knew in San Francisco! He had said he would be at the Palace for two days, and if he could do anything for her, to just let him know. He could help her now, oh so much.

She called the number. After a long while his voice came over the wire, sounding flat and strange.

"Who is it? I don't get you. Who? . . . Oh. . . . Listen, baby, I got a date for tonight, see? What? . . . Oh well, come up to the hotel, and I'll see what I can do. No, no trouble, come along. Eighth floor. Just get in the elevator and come right up. Room 810. I'll be at the elevator."

At first he didn't seem glad to see her. "Well, for heaven's sake," he said, offering her a flabby white hand. "Why did you have to pick this night out? What'll your sweetie say to this, huh?"

"Oh, that's why I came!" And she told him the whole story, breathlessly, confidently. It was so wonderful to have someone to tell it to. He was so big and kind and steady. He would know what to do.

"Well—what do you want to do?"

MARY LOU GOES SHOPPING

SHE is only eight, but, even at this tender age Mary Lou is a daily customer at the neighborhood stores. Perhaps it is a package of crackers, and a pound of coffee at the grocer's. Perhaps it is some tooth-paste or toilet soap at the drug store.

Of course Mary Lou doesn't decide on what she is going to buy. Her mother writes a list — this brand of crackers, this brand of coffee, this make of tooth-paste, this kind of soap. She knows the prices, and gives Mary Lou just enough money, with an extra penny or two, perhaps, to spend for herself.

Buying is just as simple and easy as that because of just one thing — Advertising.

Advertising has given all of us a lot to be thankful for.

Because of advertising, people in Texas know about and buy Michigan motor cars. People in New Hampshire buy oranges raised in Florida and California. Because of advertising, merchants and manufacturers are forced to improve their products. It has standardized quality. It has increased consumption and thereby lowered costs. It promotes competition and thereby keeps dealers and merchants wide awake to secure for you the most for your money.

But best of all it writes "Finis" on the business career of any merchant or manufacturer who attempts to fool the public or give them less than value received.

It pays to read all advertisements in this paper

I like mine "Toasted"

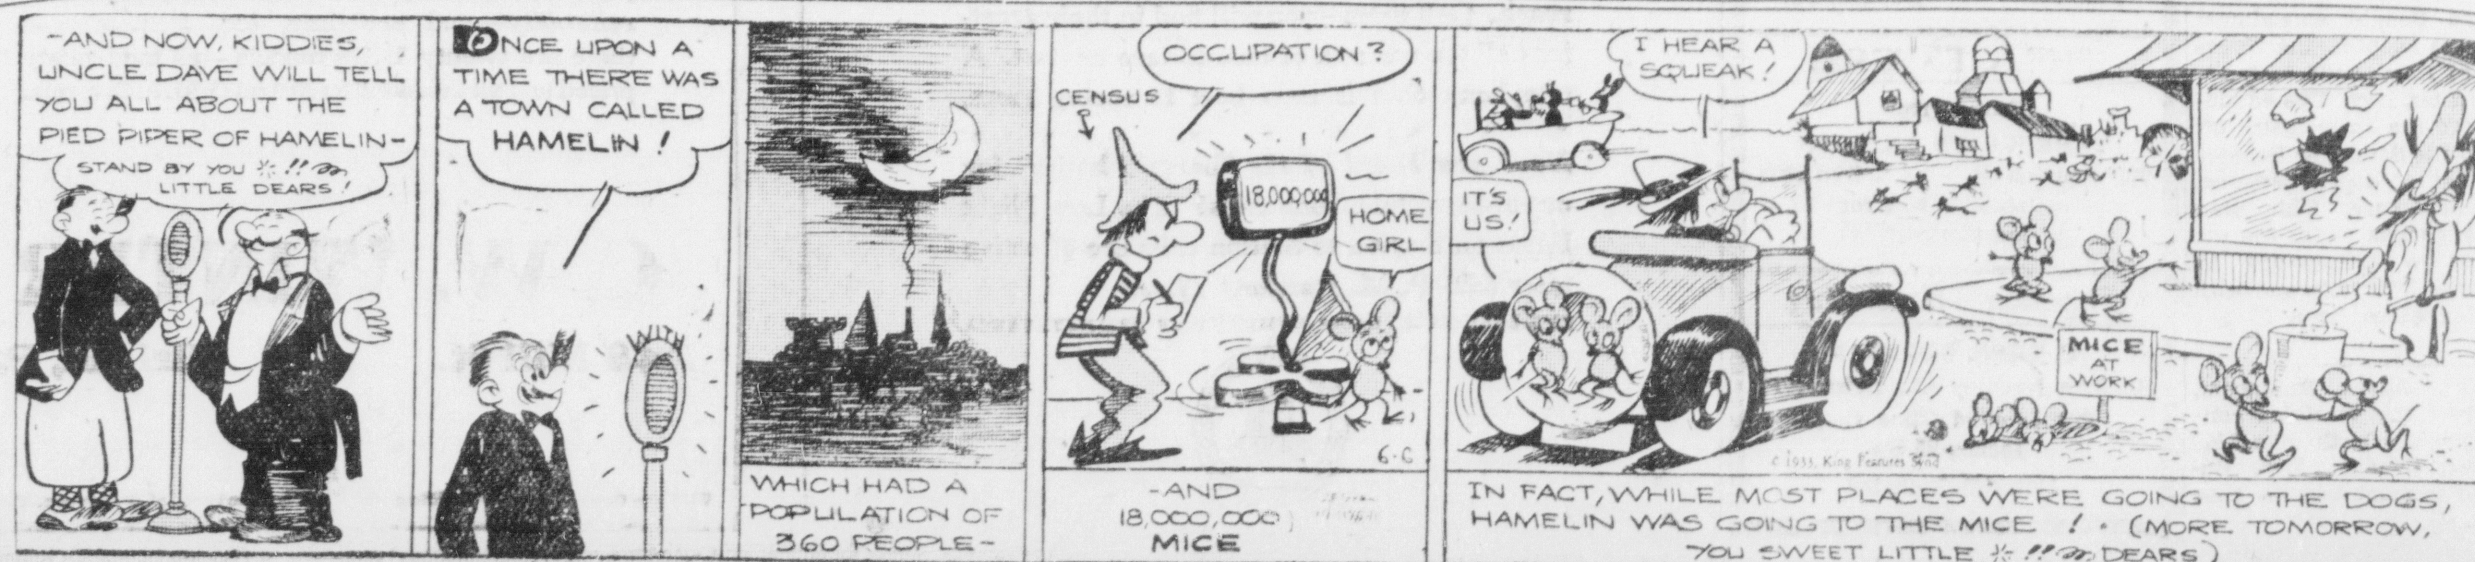

I have my preferences. When it comes to cigarettes I like mine "Toasted". Not that I understand "Toasting". I simply enjoy what "Toasting" does! I like the fine quality of Luckies — their mellow-mildness. And their purity means

"Charlie" Whyno, St. Ann's hurler, set down the Bristol Damp Wash A. A. with but four hits last night on the "Saints" field as the winners increased their lead in the Bristol Twilight League.

Whyno kept the Washers away from the plate all night while his mates were pushing across eight runs off "Hokey" Leighton. Leighton was hit hard and was beaten for the first time this season.

The victory ran the winning streak of the St. Ann's team to three straight and stopped the two-game winning streak of the Damp Washers.

The winners played heated base-ball and scored several runs on the squeeze play as well as advancing a base on every opportunity they had. In the fourth, Pieo reached first on a hit and then proceeded to steal second, third, and also home for the second time this season.

A fast double-play, Pieo to DiBlassio to Oriola and three running catches by DiTanna were the fielding features of the game.

The Jefferson A. C. advanced to second place in the league standing by scoring three runs in the sixth inning to defeat the Edgely A. C., 6-3. The defeat dropped the Edgelyites to fourth place.

In the fatal sixth inning, Britton flied out. L. Tomlinson was passed. Margerum whiffed Wright was hit by a pitched ball. Both runners advanced on a passed ball and then W. Tomlinson followed with a single to score both base-runners. Tomlinson scored when Baines threw the ball to left field in a run-down. Keating flied out.

Purcell who relieved Harmsen in the second inning, was charged with the defeat although he allowed but two hits during his term on the hill. He was very wild, hitting two batsmen and walking six.

McCurry was the Mules' twirler and was superb in the pinches. He was in a bad spot in the fourth but pulled through with only two runs being scored against him.

CANT SIEM TIDE

Washington, D. C., June 6.—Democratic leaders of the House, after a canvass of the membership, today informed President Roosevelt they cannot stem the tide of revolt against the drastic veterans' economy act. Confronted by the President's warning that $10,000,000 in new taxes must be levied if the Senate amendment limiting the act is adopted, the House leaders indicated they would seek approval for a new tax levy. The administration repeated the compromise offer presented to the Senate by Senator Byrnes, Democrat of South Carolina, but it fell on deaf ears. This plan would slice the savings under the act from $75,000,000 to $100,000,000 by limiting the World War veterans with service-connected cases, to a 25 per cent cut.

Mr. and Mrs. James Rubincam, Washington street, are receiving congratulations upon the birth of a 7½-pound daughter, Sunday. Mrs. Rubincam will be remembered as Miss Helen Comfort.

Banks of Issue or from private sources.

Supported by the Governments concerned, a banking institution of this kind would get capital moving by granting new credits, it was argued.

Before the way can be cleared, however, for the operation of a new credit organization, the Conference will have to consider the abolition of foreign exchange restrictions, by which many countries, confronted by adverse balance of accounts, adopted artificial means to balance imports and exports of foreign currency.

Economists have found that such restrictions have not had the desired effect of improving balances, since exports from each country were up against similar barriers erected in other countries.

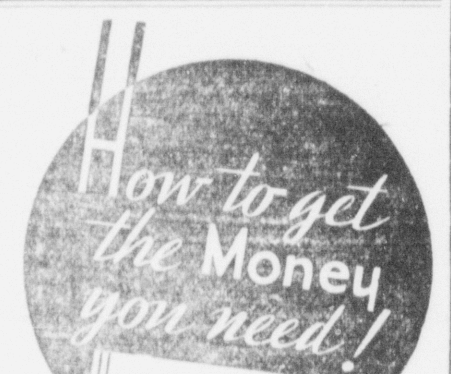

Existing indebtedness, of course, remains a prime factor in dealing with capital movements, and it has been set out in the draft agenda of the Conference that arrangements relating to foreign debts would have to be made between the parties concerned when it became evident that balance of payments could not be restored owing to the threat of mass withdrawals of short-term deposits or owing to the heavy charges resulting from the service of long-term debts.

Tells Uses Made of Money
At The Banking Houses

these sources the bank accumulates money. The bank pays interest on the Savings Deposits and in order to earn the money to pay this interest it must loan the surplus of money so that it can also make a profit. Here, then are the two main functions of the banks, to receive deposits and to loan money.

If you were guessing what proportion of the banks' deposits could be loaned you would probably guess one-half, three-quarters or all. But you are wrong because it is estimated that banks loan ten times the amount of their deposits. You will recall in the Government campaign against hoarding this was the ratio they suggested. Each dollar of increase of money in the banks represents an increase of ten dollars of credit money in commerce, industry and trade. You will next ask how a bank can loan ten times the amount of money it has on hand.

Back in the old days the goldsmiths who received gold for safekeeping issued receipts for it. These receipts, representing the gold, passed from hand to hand as money. This became so successful and the people were so well satisfied with it they seldom asked for the gold. The idea worked and the goldsmiths issued paper redeemable in gold, without having the gold on hand to redeem it, and yet it was sound as long as the goldsmith was honest. In exchange for the paper he took articles of value, called collateral, so that he always had good assets on hand, and when people did come with his paper, wanting gold for it, he had only to sell his assets and redeem the paper with gold. This worked as long as his assets were liquid and also provided too many people did not come at the same time and want the gold. Fewer and fewer people asked for the actual gold and this paper circulated as money and answered all the purposes of money for exchange. This then was the beginning of modern banking. The circulating paper became legal money and in addition to this another kind of paper—redeemable in legal money—came into existence, called checks. The increase in the use of bank checks has continued until nine-tenths of all business transactions in the country are completed by means of checks.

When you borrow money at the bank the bank credits your account with the amount of the loan and gives you a check book. You can then use the credit to pay your bills. Even though you write a check and secure the money for it as soon as you spend it back to the bank it goes. If you give checks to other people they take your check to the bank and deposit them and they receive credit and the amount is taken from your account. You can readily see no actual money is involved. Now we must see to whom the bank loans these dollars of credit which came into existence with the deposit of money at the bank.

The third window marked "Loans and Discounts" has its share in the complex system. It is here the local automobile agent borrows money or credit against a whole carload of new cars and as he sells them one by one he pays the money back to the bank. The local builder has just completed a new house and he has been paid by the owner and he is returning the money or credit he borrowed from the bank to pay for the materials and labor. The farmer is borrowing money to buy fertilizer and he will not be able to pay it back until he sells his crop, which may be six months from now. This is the ideal use of credit and the bank continues lending money to local people to meet their needs and demands until all the local people have been satisfied and the bank still has a surplus of lending power. What becomes of this? This is where credit, rising at the obscure local source, overflows the source and seeks outlets to the lakes, gulfs and seas beyond.

As soon as the local bank has this surplus credit to loan it will send it to the big bank in Philadelphia, New York or Chicago. What will these banks do with the money? After they have satisfied the needs of the merchants in domestic trade and foreign trade, they may loan the money to a broker on the Stock Exchange who loans it to a speculator. The city banks may loan it to the Bank of England or to a bank in Germany or other country where the rate of interest is high. Can you fancy, American credit, originating in the local bank in Bucks County, and other places, finding its way to a Berlin bank! Several hundred millions of just such credit did find its way to Germany and was trapped there in 1931. When the German banks said they could not pay it back, there was nothing for us to do but to leave it there and hope at some later day she could return the money or the credit.

Another use the local bank can make of its surplus credit is to loan it to the Federal Government. If does this when it buys a United States Government bond. What does the Government do with the money? They may give it to the Farm Board to help support the farmer, to the Reconstruction Finance Corporation to help the railroads, to the Veterans' Bureau, which will loan it to the war veterans, or the Federal Government may use it for some public works program.
